TEEN PEOPLE asked Reese to grab a pen, then we sent her scribblings to an expert to review

Reese chose a colorful calligraphy pen, which reveals her highly aesthetic nature (read: She's into pretty things). She cares about how she comes across to other people. Reese can be a perfectionist and gets impatient when confronted with stupidity. She keeps her promises, but her friends have to keep theirs too. It would be difficult for her to forgive and forget if they let her down. The broad flow of ink has a sensuous quality. Most of the time, Reese is easygoing and avoids conflict as much as possible.

While some of the upper loops are upright, others lean slightly to the left, so she has strong feelings but thinks before she acts—her head rules her heart.

The i's, which are dotted close to the stems, and the carefully written letters mean that Reese cares about the smallest of details. Add in the well-developed lower g and y loops and overall large feel good about yourself!

Says Reese, "This is a picture I drew of myself."

Beauty is

If a friend of mine needed cheering up I'd take them to lunch and order

all the desserts! ^{1/2} let them talk while I just listen.

The one thing in the world I wish I could do is play an instrument and speak another language (fluently!)

If I were a DJ at a Teen People Party, I'd play writing, and you get a loyal friend who loves to plan fun things for her clique.

The space between letters and words shows how much personal space someone needs. Reese's varied word and letter spacing—some narrow, some wide—suggests that she sometimes gets weirded out by the Hollywood hoopla that surrounds her.

Clever letter combinations (like the s-h in "trash") signal that Reese is supersmart and gets new ideas quickly. She's innovative and highly independent.

Reese's self-portrait, with its big smile, reflects someone who's outgoing and happy-go-lucky, but the small round eyes indicate there's a lot going on inside that she doesn't share with most people. Her drawing style shows that she's image-conscious and has a talent for aesthetics. —Sheila Lowe

"If I competed on American Idol, I'd wear my hair like this," says Reese.
